

Origin of Magic and Early Use		Eluryae's Transformation and the Birth of Olifain		Olifain's Transformation into Milfo		Thrace's Quest to End Milfo's Magic		The Final Confrontation		Elnealeam's Capture and Awakening		The Final Confrontation		The Chosen One: Jean
1. ~12,000 BCE (Néolithique): Humans (Homo Sapiens) discover a unique plant, Origo Veritatis, resembling blue lavender, which glows at night. This plant grants the ability to manipulate the elements (fire, water, light, etc.) and, eventually, the essence of life of other beings. Early Human History 1. ~11,500 BCE: Humans, with their newfound ability to control magic, gain an advantage in conflicts with other species such as Homo Habilis and Neanderthal, leading to the extinction of these species. 2. ~11,000 BCE - 3600 BCE: As human intelligence advances, they learn to use the plant for more complex tasks, such as lighting fires, melting metal, and enhancing agriculture. Decline of Origo Veritatis 1. ~3600 BCE: Origo Veritatis begins to become rare. It is no longer widely available, leading to competition for its cultivation. Some tribes and leaders begin to control the plant, making it a symbol of power. 2. ~3580 BCE: The plant becomes the object of violent conflict, as tribes fight over access to its powers. The Mount Sinai region becomes a central point of contention, where the plant can still be cultivated. This marks the beginning of the Wars of Origin. The Rise of the Elua Tribe and Eluryae 1. ~3557 BCE: After years of war, the Elua tribe, led by Rae, emerges victorious and claims dominion over Mount Sinai. Rae becomes the first to successfully consume large quantities of Origo Veritatis, gaining immense magical power. 2. ~3550 BCE: Rae, now wielding unprecedented magical abilities, manipulates the very essence of life. With a snap of her fingers, she removes the ability to use magic from anyone else, regardless of whether they consume the plant or not. The plant itself soon disappears entirely. 3. ~3545 BCE: Rae, now immortal and godlike, rebrands herself as Eluryae and is venerated as a living deity by her followers. Her tribe, the Elua, becomes known as the Elurians. The Rise and Fall of the Elurians 1. ~3204 BCE: The Elurians, under Eluryae's divine reign, become a dominant force, and the world begins to transition from tribes to nations. However, only a single tribe, the Macea, remembers Eluryae's origins and the true nature of her power. 2. ~3200 BCE: The Macea tribe, known for their taboo practice of focusing magic into objects rather than using it through their bodies, gains attention for its controversial methods. Their chief, the last known manipulator of magic, carries a black trident and seeks to infiltrate the Elurian kingdom. Betrayal and the Beginning of Hostility 1. ~3198 BCE: The Macea chief seduces Eluryae and marries her. However, he soon betrays her in a failed assassination attempt. Eluryae, with her superior power, easily defeats him and annihilates the Macea tribe and their supporters. 2. ~3198 BCE (same year): This act of self-defense sparks hatred across the world against all magic manipulators, leading to the world's alliance against the Elurians. The rest of the world sees the Elurians as a threat, and the call for their eradication begins. This is also the last recorded sighting of Eluryae. Aftermath 1. The conflict triggered by Eluryae's defense of herself and her tribe causes a massive divide between magic users and non-magic users. The once-immortal Eluryae disappears, and the myth of her existence slowly fades from history. The world begins to move into an era where magic is either feared or forbidden, and the desire to control it continues to shape human history. 2. This timeline captures the rise and fall of Origo Veritatis and Eluryae, detailing the birth and eventual destruction of the world's most powerful magic and the ensuing conflict that arose from it.		1. ~3170 BCE: Eluryae, now pregnant with the child of the Macea tribe leader, gives birth to Olifain Macea, a boy with dark skin. He is the last of the Macea tribe, born to an Elurienne. Eluryae abandons him at the gates of the Elurien city and decides to disappear beyond the clouds to observe the world, declaring, "I became the god they desperately needed." Eluryae's Preparations for Power 1. ~3170 BCE: Eluryae, aware of the trident of Olifain's father (still holding immense hatred), decides to create 12 Sceptres of Truth to become the equal of a god. She unites these sceptres with a seal, ensuring they hold her power. 2. ~3169 BCE: The tradition of the Soul Guard begins. The first Soul Guard is selected, and the role involves guarding the sceptres. If the guard dies or is absent, the sceptres return to their original places, guarded by 12 temples. A person is chosen to retrieve them. Olifain's Training and Banishment 1. ~3150 BCE: Olifain becomes a candidate for the Soul Guard. At this time, a war still rages against the rest of the world. Olifain, despite being the most skilled warrior with weapons like the lance and sword, cannot manipulate magic, making him a questionable candidate for the role of Soul Guard. 2. Along with his childhood friends, Kaeda and Ethildam, he is one of the final three candidates. Olifain is the most talented in combat, but his inability to control magic is the most significant issue. 3. ~3150 BCE: After consulting with the oracles, Olifain is rejected as the Soul Guard candidate because of a mysterious origin that the oracles refuse to explain. This rejection drives Olifain into a violent rage, and he kills one of the elders. 4. As punishment for his crime, Olifain has his left arm severed and is exiled to the Dead Valley, the site of an earlier failed assassination attempt on Eluryae, which Eluryae transformed into an open-air prison. Ethildam's Selection as Soul Guard 1. ~3149 BCE: Ethildam, the second-best candidate, is selected as the Soul Guard. She embarks on a quest to retrieve the sceptres with the help of a mysterious hooded figure wearing a red metal mask. Ethildam, however, has no desire to be a magician. Her true goal is to put an end to human magic peacefully, and she resents the role of Soul Guard. 2. After retrieving the sceptres, Ethildam decides to search for Olifain in the Dead Valley. Olifain's Discovery of the Trident 1. ~3145 BCE: While exploring the Dead Valley, Olifain encounters former members of other tribes who have become martyrs and prisoners of Eluryae. They recognize Olifain, though they no longer remember their pasts, and guide him toward a hidden cave. 2. Inside the cave, Olifain finds his father's trident and a left arm, which instinctively attaches itself to him. By wielding the trident, Olifain gains the ability to control electric magic. With this newfound power, he escapes the Dead Valley with the help of the other former prisoners. 3. Eluryaean spies, who were following Olifain, realize he and she are swiftly killed by Milfo (an ally of Olifain). Olifain now channels the intense hatred within the trident and vows to use it to help the country where he was raised. Olifain's Intervention and Rising Tensions 1. ~3144 BCE: Olifain intervenes in the middle of a battle between Elury and a rival nation. Both Ethildam and Kaeda are present during this conflict. Olifain, using his trident and electric magic, single-handedly obliterates the entire enemy army in moments. 2. Aftermath: Olifain's actions lead to celebrations and victory on the Elury side, but the hatred toward the Elurians among non-magicians grows even stronger. The Elurians face increasing hostility from the rest of the world, especially with the power shift caused by Olifain's emergence.		1. ~3144 BCE: After slaughtering soldiers and Kaeda, Olifain (now known as Milfo) decides to eradicate magic. His new arm begins to corrupt him, darkening his skin and turning his veins and eyes red. He kills all the remaining soldiers and spares Ethildam out of love. 2. ~3144 BCE: Milfo corrupts the souls of all surviving soldiers, forming an army of Mortuum. He heads toward Elury, the grand city of the Elurians, with his new army. The Fall of Elury 1. ~3144 BCE: Eluryae is powerless to stop Milfo as her magic resides within the sceptres. Milfo massacres the entire city of Elury, leaving only a few survivors to spread fear. He declares that anyone using magic will be immediately killed by his hand. The city now only holds Milfo, his army, Ethildam, her 12 companions, and the masked old man. The Final Battle 1. ~3144 BCE: As Ethildam and Milfo prepare for a final confrontation, a massive army from the continent, including even children and the elderly, surrounds the city. The world had learned of Milfo's actions and the cessation of magic, and the people rallied together in a last-ditch effort. 2. ~3144 BCE: Realizing that a massacre is imminent and that humanity might not survive, Ethildam makes the decision to stop Milfo. She accepts her role as the First Soul Guard and uses her magic to defeat Milfo. Her 12 companions lead the charge against Milfo's army. 3. ~3144 BCE: Ethildam pierces Milfo's heart, and the magic within him erupts in a massive explosion. His body disintegrates into fragments like shattered glass. 4. After the battle, the masked old man approaches Ethildam and urges her to join him. They vanish into a green light. The Curse of Milfo and the Fall of the Elurians 1. ~3144 BCE - 1243 CE: The remaining Elurians, terrified by Milfo's power, abandon the use of magic. They spread across the world, hiding their identity to avoid detection. Over time, they realize they have been cursed by Milfo—immortality. An Elurian cannot end their curse unless they die, and any attempt to use magic will result in immediate death. However, their children can still use magic but die of natural causes. Only pure-blooded Elurians suffer the curse fully. 2. During this period, Elurians live in hiding, with the world continuing to develop normally, unaware of their existence. The Execution of the Elurian 1. 1243 CE: An Elurian woman, who is approximately 4,000 years old, is discovered and executed in Normandy, France. She is publicly decapitated. Her son, Thrace, a child born of an Elurian mother and a non-Elurian father, is adopted by a family of slaves. A large-scale hunt for Elurians begins across Europe, with people labeling them as creatures of dark magic. Thrace's Escape and Discovery of the Sceptre 1. ~1273 CE: As Thrace turns 30, he is being transported across Europe. Realizing his fate, he escapes and finds refuge in a cave. The cave turns out to be a hidden temple, created by Elurians who still prayed to their goddess. There, Thrace discovers one of the 12 Sceptres created by Eluryae. 2. Thrace, hungry and naked, takes the sceptre and escapes from his captors. Thrace Meets the Masked Old Man 1. ~1273 CE: While on the run, Thrace encounters the masked old man (the same figure who helped Ethildam defeat Milfo). The man, wearing a red metal mask, aids Thrace in escaping and possibly guides him toward understanding his heritage and the power within the sceptre.		1. ~1273 CE: Thrace sets out with a singular purpose: to destroy Milfo's Trident and end the chaos it brings. He learns that the magic of Milfo, though dispersed after his death, has returned to the trident, and whoever finds it and touches it will become the receptacle of Milfo's spirit. 2. To accomplish his mission, Thrace must collect the 11 other sceptres, scattered throughout Europe. Abaddon, the General of Chaos 1. ~1275 CE: Abaddon, a normal human with the rare ability to manipulate magic, appears before Thrace at one of the temples housing the sceptres. They engage in battle, and Thrace emerges victorious, but soon learns that Abaddon has been gathering an army by corrupting humans with fragments of Milfo's body, spreading chaos throughout Europe. 2. As Thrace recovers the sceptres, Abaddon's influence grows, and the first rain of blood begins to fall, a terrifying symbol of Milfo's lingering power. Thrace's Army and the Search for Abaddon 1. ~1275 CE: Thrace begins to assemble his own army, made up of descendants of Elurians. Along with his 12 companions, he travels through Europe in search of Abaddon. As his reputation spreads, Thrace challenges the perception of Elurians, redirecting the world's anger toward Milfo, but also inciting fear in people who associate him with the same dark magic. 2. Thrace's journey culminates in the ruins of Elury, where the Trident of Milfo is said to reside. Milfo's Resurrection 1. ~1275 CE: Abaddon finally manages to seize Milfo's Trident. As he touches it, Milfo's spirit awakens and takes his original form—skin blackened, veins glowing red. Milfo watches the battle unfold between his army and humanity's forces, amused yet somewhat impressed. 2. In an act of overwhelming power, Milfo unleashes a gigantic rain of blood across the entire country, instantly annihilating Thrace's army while sparing his own. 3. The new Guardian (likely Abaddon or another figure) attempts to fight back, but the pain of the rain of blood overwhelms him, and he falls into madness. In a last, desperate act, he throws the sceptres across the land to their original locations. With the last sceptre, he sits among the corpses and waits for the end. 4. The masked old man falls from grace and leaves, unable to bear witness to the devastation. Efia and the Tragic Turn of Events 1. 1668 CE: Milfo meets Efia, a 34-year-old woman living near the Boali Falls. He falls in love with her, and they marry in 1676. They live together for over 18 years, with Milfo's sceptre of Earth was believed to be located. The creature guarding the sceptre was a giant of earth, and their battle drew attention, including that of Milfo. Milfo, who recognized the danger of Enaleam, delivered the final blow to the creature, and the two exchanged words. 2. Now equipped with the sceptre of Earth, Enaleam and Milfo had a fateful encounter. Milfo knew that Enaleam was dangerous, but he could not bring himself to attack her, for she reminded him too much of his late wife. He realized, with pain, that his own daughter had become the new guardian. 3. Enraged by the realization, Milfo attempted to attack, but he was no match for Enaleam. However, she did not know who he truly was, and she refused to kill him. Instead, she fled, knowing that her mission was far from over. The Final Hunt for the Sceptres 1. Milfo's daughter survives the massacre, and Milfo secretly places her in a village, ensuring that the word "magicka"...		1. ~1714 CE: The slave traders emerged, capturing Elurian descendants from Africa. Milfo, inspective and merciless, executed those whose magic he sensed. In exchange, the traders received slaves from isolated villages or those that resisted. Milfo personally supervised the transfers, ensuring that he alone was responsible for executing anyone in the ruins of Old Elury. 2. In 1714, Milfo's daughter, who he did not recognize, was captured by another tribe and taken aboard a ship. She was Enaleam, a 20-year-old warrior of extraordinary skill. Standing at nearly 1.95 meters, with fiery red hair and dark skin, she was a formidable force. 3. On the ship, Enaleam was kept weak enough to work but not resist. As night fell, she was woken by an old man in a red metal mask, who injected her with a strange, modern serum, reviving her. He challenged her: if she could escape, he would make her the next guardian to stop Milfo. Enaleam, already knowing of Milfo's tyranny, accepted the challenge. Escape and Vengeance 1. Enaleam managed to evade the guards and hid for two days in the ship's abandoned holds. When the ship arrived in America, the slaves were sold. However, Enaleam chose revenge over escape, waiting for the ship to depart again. Once at sea, she caused chaos and destruction, sinking the ship before finding the first sceptre of truth in one of the holds. The masked old man was waiting for her, and she accepted both the sceptre and the mission to find the rest. Enaleam's Mission 1. Enaleam was not only the best warrior of her tribe but also a powerful leader and speaker. She understood how Milfo's reign had spread terror across the world, and she became determined to stop his tyranny. 2. As Enaleam journeyed through America, she discovered the widespread fear of Milfo. The whole world lived in terror of his existence. A faction of central America sought to capture her and deliver her to Milfo, dead or alive, as a trophy. However, Enaleam's fame continued to grow, and she refused to be seen as an Elurian. She wanted to be known as someone fighting for humanity, and this resonated with people. They began calling her simply Enaleam, or General Enaleam. 3. Enaleam commandeered ships, revitalizing the memory of the former guardian, Thrace, who had fallen from grace. Her fame spread, and she gained followers, all dedicated to her cause. Confronting Milfo in Nantes 1. Enaleam's mission took her to Nantes, specifically to the port of Nantes, where the sceptre of Earth was believed to be located. The creature guarding the sceptre was a giant of earth, and their battle drew attention, including that of Milfo. Milfo, who recognized the danger of Enaleam, delivered the final blow to the creature, and the two exchanged words. 2. Now equipped with the sceptre of Earth, Enaleam and Milfo had a fateful encounter. Milfo knew that Enaleam was dangerous, but he could not bring himself to attack her, for she reminded him too much of his late wife. He realized, with pain, that his own daughter had become the new guardian. 3. Enraged by the realization, Milfo attempted to attack, but he was no match for Enaleam. However, she did not know who he truly was, and she refused to kill him. Instead, she fled, knowing that her mission was far from over. The Final Hunt for the Sceptres 1. After collecting all the sceptres, Enaleam set her sights on the seal of truth, which would be the key to planning an attack on Milfo. She knew that in order to defeat him, she would need to understand the truth behind his power and the history of the Elurian legacy.		1. Jean, a seemingly ordinary child, was chosen by the Abbes family to carry out their plans from a young age. They carefully guided him toward his destiny, without him ever knowing the extent of their manipulation. As Jean grew, the family ensured he was trained militarily, shaping him into the perfect soldier. By 1914, it was natural for him to enlist in the army. 2. On the first day of battle, Jean, as a young soldier, was injured by an artillery shell that severed his right leg. But instead of succumbing to death, he miraculously rose from the ashes, convincing the old man (the mysterious figure in the red metal mask) that Jean was the one he sought. However, Jean's suffering continued. He was injured by multiple shells before the old man could intervene. He was taken to an empty hospital, where the old man labored for two years to rebuild him using robotic parts obtained from a distant future. Transformation and Revelation 1. By 1916, Jean, now a soldier, was told that nearly all of his body had been replaced with mechanical parts. Only his head and half of his thoracic cage remained human. At first horrified by his transformation, Jean quickly understood the necessity of these alterations for his survival and began to see them as an opportunity for augmentation. 2. In addition to his military training, Jean was a skilled mechanic, and it didn't take long for him to modify his own body further, enhancing his abilities. The old man informed him that Milfo was going to return, and that his magic was concentrated in a city known as Lyon. Jean had until the end of winter to collect the sceptres, or the world would fall into chaos. The Quest for the Sceptres 1. Jean's journey began, with the first sceptre he obtained being the Sceptre of Time. This artefact granted him the ability to turn back time, enabling him to undo previous actions and acquire as many sceptres as he needed. Yet, with every sceptre Jean collected, France began losing ground, and entire battlefronts began to collapse under the pressure. 2. As Jean journeyed further, he uncovered the truth: he had been manipulated by the Abbes family all along. Enraged by this revelation, Jean decided to end the corruption once and for all, burning down the Abbes family mansion. But the family's plan was already set in motion. On December 31, the final member of the family brought Milfo back into the world, using the sceptres to resurrect him. Milfo's Return 1. The old man's plan to manipulate Jean had worked. In a shocking turn of events, the Abbes family killed one of the 12 companions of the Guardian, using his body as a vessel for Milfo's soul. The newly resurrected Milfo was overpowered and easily defeated Jean, who could do nothing but watch as Milfo tore him apart piece by piece. 2. Milfo seized the sceptres and the Sceptre of Truth, though he could not directly use the sceptres themselves. Instead, he used their powers to strengthen his own Trident. With a single blast of his magic, Milfo unleashed an explosion of energy that obliterated nearly all life on earth, transforming it into a realm of Mortuum (death) and mortuum (the dead). 3. For the first time in his existence, Milfo felt an eerie peace. He decided to pray to Eluryae, asking why he had abandoned the earth, and why she remained in the heavens. He sought to put an end to his suffering by sacrificing himself, believing that the corrupted souls in the world would die along with him, and the fire consuming the planet would cleanse it of all. The Old Man's Intervention 1. Just as Milfo prepared to end his life, he was interrupted by the old man, the only survivor of the showcase. The old man attacked, reclaiming the sceptres from Milfo and pinning him to the ground. Milfo, exhausted and ready to give up, finally admitted that he was tired of his endless struggle. He desired to die, but the old man refused. The old man revealed his true identity: Ynot Fost, from a distant future, tasked with shaping the future of humanity and putting an end to magic. With that revelation, Milfo's power began to wane, and Ynot made his move. The Final Duel 1. Ynot was transported to a white marble citadel, where he encountered Eluryae sitting in a vast field of grass. She delivered a grand speech, explaining that Jean's quest was over, and that he should hand over the sceptres to her. However, Ynot didn't trust her. He realized that Eluryae intended to reclaim the sceptres to restore her lost power and fix the world as she saw fit. 2. Ynot knew that the task of shaping the future was his alone. What followed was a fierce duel between the two. Despite Eluryae's power, she was no match for Ynot's resolve and experience. He killed the ancient goddess and, in her dying moments, she begged him to save her son. The Sculpting of a New World 1. After Eluryae's death, Ynot found himself on earth. He took a ball of clay into his hands and began to sculpt. As he shaped the clay, the entire planet was reshaped along with it. Mountains, oceans, and new forms of life emerged under his hands. With this final act, Ynot began the process of creating a new world.					