

Origo veritatis

Localisation and Origins

It contains a Liquid inside, with a similar but darker blue color, it is founded in small quantity.

Making the required quantity for a human, being 40 cl, extremely difficult. Needing at least, or more, than a hundred flowers.

It's origin is and will remain Unknown, it was founded everywhere on earth, it would not regrow anywhere else than the mount mose.

It is impossible to synthetize the Liquid inside that provide the consumer with it's powers. It is however cultivable on the mount.

General Explanation

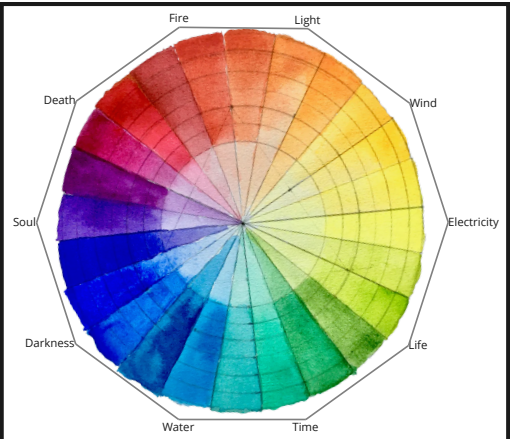

The origin of magic in humans comes from a plant (Origo Veritatis), which has the appearance of a bluish lavender that shines at night.

It allows for the manipulation of all the elements making the fabric of reality possible

If a human manages to manipulate magic sufficiently, they can then manipulate the "Soul" of life of their peers.

The flower connects to the psychic part of its consumer's soul, granting access to the powers they desire. However, to fully harness this power, the individual must learn to accept and control it.

Mastering Specter

Mastery of magic is based on a spectrum; it is not a fixed concept. For example, fire and water are opposites, so a water manipulator cannot immediately control fire. They must first manipulate a closer element, and gradually progress through the spectrum—moving to other forms, eventually reaching fire. The individual must work through the entire spectrum and train progressively over time.

Soul Of Life

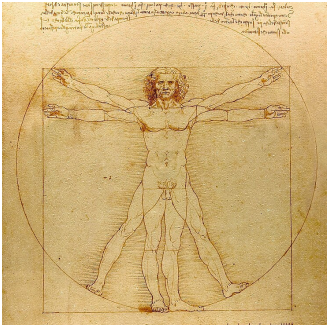

The "soul" of a human can be divided into two categories:

- Genetic traits: This includes all of their physical appearance.
- Psychic traits: This includes their ideals, memory, ideas, and thoughts.

Genetic traits are sensitive to biology, physics and nature, where the psychic traits can be influenced with magic.

Even if a soul is separated from its original bearer and given to someone else, it continues to influence its new host. In this case, the new bearer can be considered a "descendant of the soul."

Compatibility refers to how well the soul's traits align with those of the new bearer. Over time, the psychic and genetic traits of the soul and the host will either merge or clash, depending on this compatibility.

- Psychic Traits refer to the mental, emotional, and cognitive aspects of a person, shaping their inner world and interactions. These include:
- Ideals and Values: Beliefs, ethics, and personal goals that drive decisions and actions.
 - Memory: Past experiences and emotional responses that influence growth, learning, and adaptation.
 - Ideas and Thoughts: Cognitive patterns, creative thinking, and emotional intelligence for problem-solving and managing emotions.
 - Personality and Behavior: Temperament, emotional regulation, and social interactions that define how one reacts and connects with others.
- Genetic Traits refer to the physical and biological aspects of a person inherited through DNA. These include:
- Physical Appearance: Features like facial structure, height, hair color, skin tone, and eye color.
 - Health Predispositions: Genetic conditions and traits influencing strength, endurance, or disease susceptibility.
 - Reproductive Traits: Abilities and genetic variations passed to offspring, shaping biological legacy.

While genetic traits are fixed, psychic traits are fluid, evolving with experiences and introspection.

First sign of Agriculture

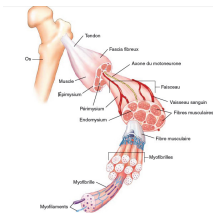

As the people inhabating the Mount Mose grew larger, the need for the flower, even restrained, was extreme.

Hundreds of fields were made cultivable on the mount.

A revoir, mais si les éléments primordiaux sont ceux si, existe-t-il encore une table des éléments classiques ?

Mastering an Element:
To control a particular element or magic, a human must train. Think of this as developing a muscle. The flower creates a new muscle capable of using magic, and it's up to the individual whether they choose to train it.

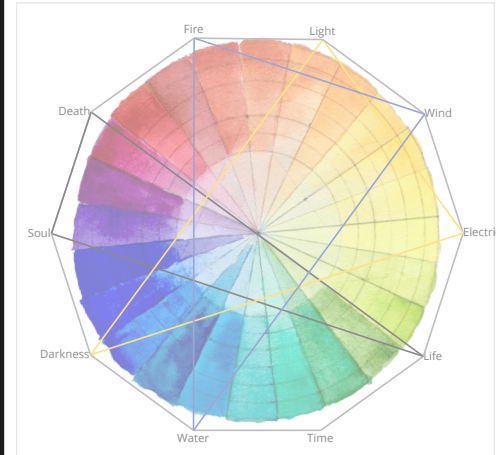

This "muscle" is made up of smaller muscles for different elements (fire, water, wind, etc.), each with its own subcategories. For example, water includes steam and ice, while fire includes plasma, spark, and lava.

These elemental muscles can either atrophy or grow stronger over time, depending on how much training the individual puts into them.

Exercising an Element:
For a manipulator of magic to master an element, he must be in phase with it, whatever it is, a light Bearer will expose himself to the sun, a water Bearer will meditate in any water body, and so on...

Primordial Triangles

Even though the scepters slow down mastery over certain forms of magic, high-level wielders can access the Primordial Triangles, three categories encompassing a total of nine elements.

The Thetas

- Light: A symbol of hope, clarity, and illumination, light exposes truths and drives away darkness. It represents creation and positive energy.
- Shadow: Often misunderstood, shadow embodies mystery, concealment, and duality. It complements light, for one cannot exist without the other.
- Electricity: The raw energy of storms, electricity represents power, speed, and connectivity. It bridges the gap between the tangible and intangible, like a pulse of life.

The Thetas work in harmony and contrast. Light and shadow define each other, while electricity acts as a bridge, combining the duality of light and dark with raw energy.

The Epsilons

- Soul: The essence of individuality and consciousness, soul magic deals with emotions, identity, and connections between beings.
- Life: Representing growth, vitality, and renewal, life magic is the force that animates all living things and promotes healing.
- Death: Often feared, death signifies closure, transformation, and the cycle's end, making way for rebirth and renewal.

The Epsilons represent the cycle of existence. The soul ties life and death together, ensuring that both stages are meaningful and interconnected.

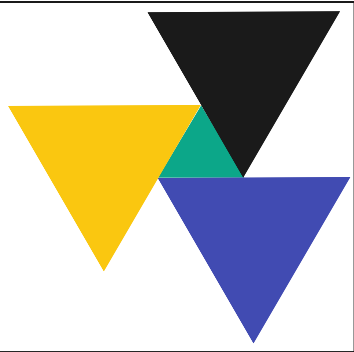

The Omicrons

- Fire: Representing energy, destruction, and renewal, fire is a force of transformation, capable of both creating and consuming. Its versatility lies in its ability to destroy obstacles or provide warmth and light.
- Water: Symbolizing adaptability and persistence, water can erode even the hardest stone over time. It also embodies healing and purification, making it crucial for balance.
- Wind: Representing freedom and movement, wind governs speed and agility. It can be as gentle as a breeze or as destructive as a storm.

The Omicrons represent the fundamental forces of nature, constantly interacting. Fire needs air (wind) to burn, and water balances fire by extinguishing it while being moved and shaped by the wind.

Time

Time is a unique and standalone element, considered the most elusive and challenging to master. It transcends the tangible, existing as a concept rather than a material force. Mastery over time requires unparalleled skill and understanding of the other elements, as it governs their progression and interaction. Time is often seen as the final step in training before achieving godhood as it involves manipulating the flow of events, reality, and the fabric of existence itself.
